Scientists Discover The Oldest, Largest Body Of Water In Existence--In Space

Around a black hole 12 billion light years away, there's an almost unimaginable vapor cloud of water--enough to supply an entire planet's worth of water for every person on earth, 20,000 times over.

Scientists have found the biggest and oldest reservoir of water ever--so large and so old, it's almost impossible to describe.

The water is out in space, a place we used to think of as desolate and desert dry, but it's turning out to be pretty lush.

Researchers found a lake of water so large that it could provide each person on Earth an entire planet's worth of water--20,000 times over. Yes, so much water out there in space that it could supply each one of us all the water on Earth--Niagara Falls, the Pacific Ocean, the polar ice caps, the puddle in the bottom of the canoe you forgot to flip over--20,000 times over.

That one cloud of newly discovered space water vapor could supply 140 trillion planets that are just as wet as Earth is.

The new cloud of water is enough to supply 28 galaxies with water.
